I.

VARIATIONS OF SPELLING IN OTHER BOOKS ON THE LANGUAGE OF AMOY.

SPELLING OF MEDHURST'S DICTIONARY.

The spelling used in the Dictionary of the Hok-kien Dialect, by the Rev. Dr. Medhurst, differs very widely from that used in this book. It is founded on the principle of imitating the English sounds of vowels, and is therefore extremely confused, besides being somewhat too much influenced by the Chinese tables of initials and finals, a subject into which I cannot enter here.

The initials, when consonants, are for the most part the same as mine, except the following:—

gr is used instead of ng.

ch is used both for ch and ts.

The aspirated consonants are indicated not merely by h, but by a small comma inserted between the h and the other consonant.

u^{m} is used instead of m, a syllable that really contains no vowel.

w is usually used instead of o at the beginning of a diphthong; woey instead of oe; woo or wu instead of u; and wui instead of ui.

y is used as an initial instead of i at the beginning of a diphthong; yë instead of i in some diphthongs; yew instead of iu; yi instead of i before m, n, p, and t; also yung instead of iong.

The greatest changes occur in the finals. A final means in Chinese nomenclature the whole of a word excepting the initial consonant or consonants, or even the whole word if there be no initial consonant.

The following list will enable the student to understand Medhurst's spelling of these finals. The first is Medhurst's spelling, the second is its equivalent as used in this Dictionary.

ae	ai	ëuk	iok
ai^{ng}	ɛ^{n}	ew	iu
aou	au	ey	e
ay	ɛ	^{n}o	ɵ^{n}
e	i	oe	ɵ
e^{ng}	ng	öey	oe
ëa	ia	öey, when preceded by m,	oɛ
ëang	iang	oo	u
ëaou	iau	u^{m}	m
ee^{ng}	i^{n}	wa	oa
eeh	ih	wae	oai
ëem	iam	wan	oan
ëen	ien	wang	oang
ëep	iap	wu	u
ëet	iet	wui^{ng}	ui^{n}
ëo	io	wun	un
ëo^{ng}	iɵ^{n}	wuy	ui
ëung	'iong

I have not thought it necessary to swell the list by inserting syllables ending in h, k, p, or t, which are regularly formed from vowels or diphthongs of which the equivalents are given above. Nor have I noticed the short mark placed by Medhurst above some vowels, as this is sufficiently indicated by these four final letters, h, k, p, t.

Medhurst writes the nasal sometimes ^{n}, sometimes ^{ng}, and places it sometimes in the middle of a word, sometimes at the beginning or the end. I always place it at the end, as it qualifies the whole vowel part of the word; and I always write it ^{n}.

In other respects Medhurst's spelling agrees with mine, or, if there be other variations, they must be very few.

But it must be remembered that Medhurst's dictionary is not of the Amoy form of the language, it is of the Changchew dialect, and, indeed, strictly of that variety of the Changchew dialect which is spoken at Chang-poo or Chiu^{n}-phé, so that the difference in the words is partly a difference of spelling and partly of dialect, such as is indicated in this Dictionary by C. or P.

VARIETIES OF SPELLING USED IN SOME OTHER BOOKS.

The books issued by the mission-press of the American Reformed Church differ but slightly in orthography from this Dictionary. Instead of ɵ they use o. ch is used both for ch and ts. The finals ien and iet, are spelled ian and iat. The nasal ^{n} is not appended to words beginning with m, n, or ng, because all such words are understood to be nasal. Hyphens are used to a much less extent than in this Dictionary (which indeed may be said of all other publications), and only in some of their publications is there any attempt to indicate the penultimate accent; in their later issues it is indicated by a small dot on a level with the top of the letters, e.g. jit·sî, =jit--sî.

The Manual of the Amoy Dialect, published by the late Rev. E. Doty of the same mission, differs from mine in the same points, and in the following. The aspirate is indicated by an inverted comma. He writes the finals eng, ek, as ieng, iek. He does not use hyphens at all. In his book, and those which follow (as also in Medhurst), there is no attempt to indicate the penultimate accent; and so enclitic words are often written as if in the "chiū^{n}-jip" tone, e.g. sih, mah, &c.

In the Manual of the Amoy Colloquial, by the Rev. John Macgowan o· is used instead of ɵ; ch both for ch and ts; and in order to avoid the necessity of making types with a perpendicular accent, the "ē-jip" tone is written with an acute accent instead of a perpendicular accent, so that it is distinguished from the "chiū^{n}-sia^{n}" tone by the finals, h, k, p, t.

The books reprinted or edited by Dr. Maxwell of the Formosa Mission use o· instead of o͘; spell the finals ian, iat, where I have ien, iet, and make but a limited use of hyphens.

Other books that have been published in the Amoy vernacular are quite out of print, and so rare that it is not necessary to allude to the variations of spelling in them.

II.

SOME VARIATIONS OF THE TONES IN THE DIALECTS OF CHANG-CHEW, CHIN-CHEW, AND TUNG-AN.

The description of the tones given in the Introduction applies strictly to the form of the language spoken in Amoy itself and the immediate neighbourhood. In the various dialects closely allied to the pure Amoy dialect there are slight variations of tone, many of them too minute to be described, and only to be caught by the ear. In general no attention need be paid to them unless one live in the region where the particular dialect is spoken. Some of the more noteworthy variations are described below.

1. CHANG-CHEW.

The chiū^{n}-piâ^{n} or upper first tone, called in Chang-chew the téng-pê^{n}, is not quite level, but has a very slight upward movement; this upward movement is generally so slight as to be scarcely noticed except by a very practised ear, but in some phrases it is quite marked.

The ē-piâ^{n} or lower first, called there the ē-pê^{n}, is more drawn out than in Amoy. The description of the Amoy tone still applies to it, but there is a sort of drawl in the pronunciation, and the rise of the voice at the end is often not so decided as at Amoy, so that occasionally it might almost be mistaken for the "ē-khì."

The two khì tones (the upper and lower third) seem to be not so sharply distinguished as in Amoy, at least I have sometimes found it difficult to say whether a word pronounced alone belonged to the "chiū^{n}-khì" or to the "ē-khì;" but, strange to say, whenever the word loses the accent by being the first word of a group of two in which the second has the accent, then the distinction becomes quite clear, according to the rules for the tones of unaccented words given in part of the Introduction on "Tones in Combination."

The ē-jip or lower fourth tone is the one on which the greatest change takes place. It may be described as almost exactly the "ē-piâ^{n}" tone cut short at the end, that is to say, the voice first falls very low and then ends in a sharp abrupt upward jerk, somewhat like the English "What?" pronounced not as a mere interrogation, but with a strongly marked tone of great surprise and astonishment. Occasionally this tone is so pronounced that it is not easily distinguished from the "ē-piâ^{n}."

2. CHIN-CHEW.

The dialect of Chin-chew is usually spoken with greater rapidity than that of Amoy, several words being often run almost into one; and as it has also a more guttural sound, it is sometimes rather difficult to follow. It will be seen that some of the changes in the tones are connected with this tendency to a hurried pronunciation.

The chiū^{n}-piâ^{n} begins much as the Amoy tone, but instead of remaining level has a very slight downward slope; but this downward motion has not the least resemblance to the rapid falling swing of the "chiū^{n}-sia^{n}:" it is still pronounced with the calmness and quiet regularity of the Amoy tone. It bears a considerable resemblance to the usual inflection given to the same tone (the first tone or Shang ping) in the Mandarin.

The ē-piâ^{n}, while retaining the general shape of the Amoy intonation (first downwards and then upwards), is pronounced on a higher key and with more rapidity or abruptness, and the rising at the end is very marked.

The chiū^{n}-sia^{n} or second tone, which in Amoy is not divided (and not even attempted to be divided) into an upper and a lower tone, is said by the literary men of Chin-chew to be divided into the upper second or chiū^{n}-chiū^{n}, and the lower second or ē-chiū^{n}; but I have not been able to observe any difference, nor have I marked any special divergence from the usual Amoy intonation of the "chiū^{n}-sia^{n}," except that in some parts of the Chin-chew region it approaches somewhat to that peculiarity of the Tung-an dialect which is described below.

The two khì or khṳ̄ tones (the upper and lower third) are changed in a very striking manner: they are both pronounced with a rapid or abrupt ending, much like that of the "chiū^{n}-jip," but on a lower key. The two "khì" tones thus altered are rather apt to be confounded with each other; but just as in the Chang-chew dialect, whenever a word belonging to the "chiū^{n}-khì" tone stands first in a group of two, while the second word has the principal accent, then at once this tone becomes clearly distinguished from the "ē-khì," according to the rules given in the Introduction on "Tones in Combination."

3. TUNG-AN.

The dialect of Tung-an, Tung-ngan, or Tâng-oa^{n}, is for the most part intermediate between that of Chin-chew and the dialect of Amoy in the more strict or limited sense. Its tones are usually much the same as those of Amoy, while in those parts of the district of Tung-an which lie towards Chin-chew there is a tendency towards some of the tonal peculiarities of the Chin-chew dialect.

The chiū^{n}-sia^{n} or second tone, and the chiū^{n}-jip or upper fourth tone, are almost or quite undistinguishable from each other.

The ē-piâ^{n} or lower first, and the ē-khì or lower third, when they lose the accent by standing first in a group of two words while the second has the principal accent, become quite undistinguishable from each other, each being pronounced low and level; but the "ē-piâ^{n}" when alone, and when accented, has much the same intonation as in Amoy.

III.

EXTENT OF THE AMOY VERNACULAR, AND ITS SUB-DIVISION INTO DIALECTS.

The vernacular of Amoy has attracted special attention, because Amoy was one of the five ports opened to foreign trade by the treaty of Nankin, and because its language differs very widely from the languages spoken at the other ports opened by that treaty, so widely different indeed as to be mutually unintelligible. Since the date of that treaty several ports in the island of Formosa, where the same dialect is spoken, have also been opened to trade; but the name of Amoy was applied to this dialect or vernacular long before these ports were opened, and would have been so doubtless though they had all been opened at once, because of its superior importance as a place of trade and intercourse.

Before the port of Amoy was opened to foreign trade the dialect of Amoy, in its more limited sense, had not attracted attention. The name then given to this form of the Chinese language was the "Hok-kien dialect," the title used in Medhurst's quarto dictionary, and the special form of the language exhibited in that dictionary is the dialect of Chang-poo or Chiu^{n}-phé, a district or county in the department or prefecture of Chang-chew.

Amoy stands in the department or prefecture of Chin-chew, but the dialect spoken at the city of Chin-chew differs from that of the town of Amoy almost as much as that of Chang-chew does. We have thus the three great varieties of the Amoy (A.), the Chang-chew (C.), and the Chin-chew (Cn.), which, with smaller variations, may be said to form one language spoken in five departments of the province of Hok-kièn or Fuh-kien, namely, three Foo departments, Chang-chew (Chiang-chiu-hú), Chin-chew or Tseuen-chow (Tsoân-chiu-hú), and Formosa or Tai-wan (Tâi-oân-hú), and in two Chow departments, Yung-chun (Éng-chhun-chiu) and Lung-yen (Liông-gâm-chiu or Lêng-nâ^{n}); but in some parts of these Chow departments other dialects of Chinese are also spoken.

1. CHANG-CHEW, &c.

The most marked peculiarities of the Chang-chew dialect (in addition to the tonal changes noted in No. II.) are these—e into oe in many words, and vice versa oe into e in about as many, a singular pair of opposed changes for which I have not been able to find any simple rule.

ng into ui^{n}, when the final in the reading form is n; also in a few words from the reading final -ong, when it corresponds to the Mandarin -wang.

iong into iang in those words which also appear in the colloquial form iu^{n}, corresponding to the Mandarin yang; but those words which correspond to the colloquial ng and to the Mandarin ang, do not become iang, but remain iong.

iok into iak in many words, but far from being a general rule.

u into i, and un into in, in many cases; but occasionally in changes to un.

i^{n} into ɛ^{n} when the reading final is eng; but when the reading final is ien or iam, the col. remains i^{n}.

a into ɛ in those words which have also a colloquial form in e.

e into ɛ in colloquial words from the reading form a.

eh into ɛh, in most or all words formed from the reading final ek, and also in some other words.

eng into an in many colloquial words from the reading form ien.

iu^{n} into ie^{n}.

oe into oa in words from the reading form oa.

iet into oat in many words.

ek into it in some words.

mui^{n} into moɛ^{n} in some words.

The dialect of Chang-poo (P.) or Chiu^{n}-phé is merely a variation of the Chang-chew dialect. The chief points of difference are (1) oai or oɛ instead of oa in those words where the Amoy has oe. (2) iong in many words for the Amoy eng, and in like manner iok for ek; but conversely eng often for iong, and ek for iok. These changes also take place in some other parts of Chang-chew prefecture. (3) eng often remains the same as the Amoy form where the Chang-chew has an. But the dialect of Chang-poo varies considerably at the two ends of that long District or county.

In Ping-ho district (Pêng-hô) the dialect is in the main like the rest of Chang-chew with some of the peculiarities of Chang-poo. But on the western border of the Ping-ho district the Hakka dialect is spoken.

Tiô-thoà or Chang-tai is said to have some remarkable peculiarities, due partly to its position on the borders of Chin-chew prefecture, and perhaps still more to the fact that in former times it was a part of that prefecture.

Chau-an (Chiàu-an) is said to approach in dialect to the language of Swatow (see No. IV.), but I have not had opportunities of observing.

Hái-têng and Lâm-chēng speak very nearly the dialect of Chang-chew city and of Liông-khe, the district in which that city stands, but in the parts of Hái-têng near Amoy the influence of the strictly Amoy dialect is very decidedly felt.

The Chow department of Lung-yen or Lêng-nâ^{n} uses to a large extent the dialect of Chang-chew, but in parts of it the Hakka is spoken.

2. CHIN-CHEW, TUNG-AN, &c.

The dialect of Chin-chew city (Cn.) and of the district of Chìn-kang in which it stands, is also spoken with but slight variations in the adjoining Hien districts of Nan-an or Lâm-oa^{n} (L.), Hūi-an or Hūi-oa^{n} (H.), and Ankoi or An-khoe (An. or Ank.) Some variations of the dialects of these districts are noted in the Dictionary; and it may be observed that a considerable part of Lâm-oa^{n}, bordering on Tung-an, partakes of many of its peculiarities.

The principal variations of the Chin-chew dialect are as follows:—

u into ü; this takes place almost invariably when in Chang-chew i takes the place of the Amoy u; it also occurs in many words, especially in the syllable su, where the Chang-chew retains u.

un into ün almost or quite invariably where the Chang-chew changes to in, and also in some other words.

eng into üi^{n} when it comes from the reading termination ien or iam; this occurs in all cases where the Chang-chew has an for the Amoy eng, and in some also where the Chang-chew agrees with the Amoy sound.

eng into öng in some words.

e into ö almost invariably where the Chang-chew changes to oe; so also eh into öh.

oe into öe almost invariably when the Chang-chew changes to e; so also oeh into öeh.

o into ɞ generally in those words which have au in Mandârin.

ɞ or au into ïo in many words where the reading ɞ corresponds to the colloquial au. In ïo the accent is on ï, not on the o.

ch, ts, or j, sometimes into dz, or a sound near it (only in the lower series of tones).

j is often pronounced very thick so as to change to l, or very nearly so.

Another remarkable feature of the Chin-chew dialect is the large number of totally different words (not merely differently pronounced) that are used, e.g. söh for kóng, to speak; thè and khit for hō, to give, or sign of passive; bōe-tsŏe--tit instead of bōe-sái--tit, &c.

Tung-an (T.) or Tâng-oa^{n}, though on the one hand it is the district in which Amoy stands, and on the other hand it is a district of the department or prefecture of Chin-chew, has yet a very marked variety of dialect for itself. It is said to have originally belonged to the prefecture of Chang-chew, which may perhaps partly explain its peculiarities. In many points it is more or less similar to the Chin-chew, from which the following are the chief variations:—(1) ai^{n} instead of the Chin-chew üi^{n}, especially when that takes the place of the Amoy eng; (2) oai^{n} in some cases instead of the Amoy oa^{n}; and in several other particulars it is intermediate between the Chin-chew and the pure Amoy.

Kwan-kow or Koàn-kháu (K. or Kk.) is a part of Tung-an district, near the island of Amoy. Among its special peculiarities are the frequent use of io instead of ɞ, and the extensive use of u for i. These peculiarities are said to be shared by the dialect of Tiô-thoà, referred to above under Chang-chew. But the use of u for i in some words is also found in many other parts of Tung-an and even in the villages on Amoy island.

The Chow department of Yung-chun or Eńg-chhun has in most parts nearly the same form of dialect as Chin-chew. The district of Tāi-tiên or Toā-chhân, in that department, is said to have a dialect widely different, but I have not had an opportunity of examining it.

3. COLONIZATION AND EMIGRATION.

Formosa has been colonized within about 200 years mainly by emigrants from Amoy, Chang-chew, and Chin-chew. The several parts of the island are usually found to be specially inhabited by emigrants from the several parts of the mainland, but in Formosa the various forms of the dialects mentioned above are a good deal mixed up.

Singapore and the various Straits Settlements, Batavia and other parts of the Dutch possessions, are crowded with emigrants, especially from the Chang-chew prefecture; Manila and other parts of the Philippines have great numbers from Chin-chew, and emigrants are largely scattered in like manner in Siam, Burmah, the Malay Peninsula, Cochin China, Saigon, &c. In many of these places there is also a great mixture of emigrants from Swatow. The Chinese in California and Australia are chiefly from other parts of China, but yet in Australia at least there is a considerable proportion of emigrants from the Amoy region.

In such fields of colonization and emigration there is a certain tendency to mix up the minor varieties of the sub-dialects; and at Singapore, Batavia, &c., a good many Malay words are often used in combination with the Chinese phrases.

In Formosa large tribes of the Aborigines have learned the Amoy vernacular or some of its dialects.

IV.

RELATION TO OTHER LANGUAGES.

Of the other languages of China the most nearly related to ours is the vernacular of Chau-chau-foo or Tie-chiu, in the province of Canton or Kwang-tung, on the borders of the province of Fuh-kien. The only treaty-port in that region of country is Swatow, so that the language is often called the "Swatow dialect." The ancestors of those people emigrated many centuries ago from the province of Fuh-kien, and to this day they are distinguished from the other inhabitants of the Canton province by the appellation "Hok-ló," that is the persons from Hok-kièn or Fuh-kien. That dialect of Swatow or Tie-chiu differs from the Amoy much as Dutch differs from German, or as Portuguese from Spanish, so that those who understand one or other of the dialects well can make out the greater part of what is said in the other. A large proportion of the changes which take place in passing from the Amoy to the Swatow are also found more or less in the various local dialects of the Amoy illustrated in this book, such as the Chang-chew, the Chin-chew, &c.

The island of Hai-nan (Hái-lâm), also in the Canton province, differs much more than the Swatow, but still is more nearly related to the Amoy and Swatow than to any of the other languages of China. But the centre of that island, just as is the case in Formosa, is inhabited by aboriginal races totally different from the Chinese, and having languages of a quite different stock.

Fuh-chau-foo, the capital of Fuh-kien province, is the chief seat of another "dialect," which is largely spoken in the centre and north of the province; it has many points of resemblance to the Amoy, but is quite unintelligible to the Amoy Chinese with the exception of an occasional word or phrase.

Hing-hwa-foo (Heng-hoà), which lies between Fuh-chau and Chin-chew, has a "dialect" or language of its own, though it contains only two counties or Hien districts; it is said to be unintelligible both at Fuh-chau and at Amoy, but I have not been able to examine it.

To the other languages of China the Amoy vernacular is less closely related. Yet they all evidently spring from one common stock. That common stock is not the modern Mandarin dialect, but the ancient form of the Chinese language as spoken about 3000 years ago. The so-called "Mandarin," far from being the original form, is usually more changed than any of the other languages or dialects of China.

The clue to the ancient form of the Chinese language was discovered by the Rev. Joseph Edkins of the London Missionary Society, now stationed at Pekin; he has given copious explanations on the subject in his Grammar of the Mandarin Dialect, and in his China's Place in Philology.

Among the sources from which the ancient form of Chinese has been thus recovered, a prominent place is held by the Amoy dialect, especially because its final consonants very generally retain the ancient form.

It is in the ancient form of the Chinese language that the relation of Chinese to the other languages of the world becomes most distinct, as is shown in China's Place in Philology above referred to, so that for this purpose the study of the Amoy vernacular is of considerable importance.

V.

ENCLITICS.

The mark used in this Dictionary for an enclitic word is a double hyphen placed before it. The enclitics may be roughly divided into the following classes, which do not lay claim to any scientific precision or exhaustive minuteness:—

Final particles used at the end of a sentence, or sometimes at the end of a verb, adjective, or substantive, e.g. ah, á, lah, leh, loh, gioh or gióh, kioh, ioh, hȇⁿ, hɐhⁿ, nihⁿ, chiah, cheh, tsài.

Some are interrogative, e.g. má or mah, nihⁿ, lāi, tāi.

Most of these words enumerated above are never used except as enclitics, so that it is sometimes very difficult to determine the proper spelling, or the reading form to which the colloquial corresponds.

Certain adverbs and adjectives, and some particles, which are also used as accented words, e.g. ê, nihⁿ, tsāi, hia, keng, koáⁿ or koá. Some of these are usually enclitic, others but rarely.

Negative words placed at the end of a sentence to give an interrogative sense, e.g. bô, m̄, bōe, bē. These words are much more commonly used in other positions where they are not enclitic.

Substantives which are generally used as ordinary words in other positions, but which are occasionally enclitic, e.g. sî, time; sì, a clan or surname; sì, world; sì, power or direction; kan, bīn, jī, iūⁿ, lâng, nîⁿ, jit, gėh, ko, kong, hō, chhù, tè, thâu.

Some such substantives and adjectives are very extensively used as enclitics in the names of places, especially thâu, chhù, piⁿ, tau, ē, and lāi.

Pronouns, when not emphatic, e.g. goá, goán, lán, lí, lín, i, in. In some cases such unemphatic and enclitic pronouns are used indefinitely, as is the case very generally with lâng quoted among the substantives.

Verbs in common use as ordinary words, but which are also sometimes enclitic, e.g. kìⁿ, lâi, khì, tsáu, chiūⁿ, liáu, sí, kàu, tn̄g, phoà, poáh, khoàⁿ, tó, chih, chiàh, siā, tsai. Sometimes in such cases the verb, as used after another verb, may be either enclitic or not according as the one or the other is meant to be emphatic; e.g. thâi--sí, to kill by cutting; thâi-sí, to cut so as to kill.

Some of the verbs enumerated above come to be almost like auxiliaries when enclitic, but this is specially the case with the enclitics tióh, tit, and teh. Of these the last teh has not been definitely identified with any word in the reading form, and it is very doubtful whether it is the same as the verbal prefix teh of the same sound. In many of the phrases with tióh, that word may be pronounced either as an enclitic or not, e.g. chhē--tióh, or chhē-tióh, with but little if any difference of meaning.

Double enclitics are chiefly found among the verbs, e.g. lóh-lâi, lóh-khì, khí-lâi, khí-khì, kè-lâi, kè-khì, tò-khì, lâi-khì, m̄-khì, chhut-lâi. All these are found following a verb which takes the primary accent, e.g. pùih--khí-lâi, phah--m̄-khì, tò--lâi-khì; where the principal accent is on the first word, the second is quite unaccented, and a slight secondary accent usually falls on the third word; but sometimes the third word also is quite unaccented, while on the other hand it sometimes recovers more or less of its own original tone.

Double enclitics are very rare except in the case of verbs, but examples of other parts of speech are found in sien-siⁿ and chit-ē; but the latter is often contracted to cheh.

It is of great importance to attend carefully to these various enclitics, both in order to speak idiomatically and correctly, and because numerous phrases have a totally different meaning according as the last word is accented or enclitic; e.g. koaⁿ--lâng and koaⁿ-lâng; āu--jit and āu-jit; pun--chiàh and pun-chiàh; thè--khì and thè-khì; bô--khì and bô-khì; taⁿ--lâi and taⁿ-lâi; tsòe--lâng and tsòe-lâng, &c.

VI.

Several other appendices entered into my plan, and the materials have been collected in considerable abundance, but time does not allow of their being arranged and extended at present for publication. But in the Companion, Key, or Sequel to this Dictionary, which I shall endeavour to publish ere long, there may be expected, besides the Chinese characters for the words, such tables as the following:—

A table of phrases in pairs, where the second word of each pair is identical in sound and tone, while the first words agree in sound and differ only in tone; e.g. khí-thâm and khì-thâm; hûi-khì and hùi-khì; ké-ì and kè-ì, id. Sometimes there are three, four, or even five phrases thus connected in sound, e.g. kàu-bé, káu-bé, and kâu-bé.

Table of remarkable changes in the initials of the words.

Table of remarkable changes in the finals of words.

Phrases where decided difference of sense is caused by change of accent or by a slight pause.

Table of words which are found at least in three forms—the literary and two or more purely colloquial forms—of such words I have alreadv collected several hundred.

Remarkable changes of tones.

THE END.

PREFACE

In the year 1873, just fifty years ago, the Rev. Dr. Carstairs Douglas published his monumental "Dictionary of the Vernacular or Spoken language of Amoy." It was recognized at once on all hands as a work of marvellously full and accurate scholarship. And during the half-century that has elapsed since its publication, it has been of incalculable benefit to all students of the language.

During that time a great change has come over China. Western civilization, to an increasing extent, has been welcomed, and new ideas in every department of thought and action have filled the minds of the people. These new ideas have demanded for their expression new terms, the addition of which has much enriched and extended the language. So that, especially of late years, it has been increasingly felt that the Dictionary, so full and satisfactory at the time of publication, could no longer be considered a sufficient guide to the student of the language. Accordingly some ten years ago I received an invitation from my Amoy colleagues to make a collection of these new words and phrases, to be published as a Supplement to the Dictionary. The result of the labours of such time as I have been able to spare from other duties is now given to the world.

The necessity for such an undertaking will be at once manifest to anyone who looks through the following pages. The word now in such common use, "hāu, a school," does not occur at all in the Dictionary. Fifty years ago, societies, "hōe," were taboo, looked on by the authorities with suspicion; there are only some twelve names of such given in the Dictionary. In the Supplement such names occupy about a whole page. Under the word "tiēn, electricity" in the Supplement there are over 100 phrases given. In the Dictionary itself there are only two phrases noted, and neither of these refers to electricity.

In preparing this Supplement I have endeavoured to conform as closely as possible to the methods of the Dictionary, even in such matters as spelling, where in some respects my own practice differs from that of Dr. Douglas. I have, of course, in all cases endeavoured to conform to the Amoy dialect; the form of dialect with which I am familiar in South Formosa resembles in some particulars rather that of Chang-chew or Chang-poo. I hope I have not by mistake inserted any expressions in other than their Amoy form.

In the case of headings which occur also in the Dictionary, I have not thought it necessary to quote the full meanings of the word; I have given only enough to make it easy to recognize to which heading the phrases belong. In all such cases it is necessary, in order to get the full meaning of a word, to refer first to the Dictionary. In some of the explanations given in the Supplement it is assumed that the word has already been looked up in the Dictionary. New headings which do not occur in the Dictionary are marked with an asterisk (*).

I have made no attempt to illustrate the different dialects; this is done fully in the Dictionary itself. Also I have given up the idea of distinguishing the different phrases, as is done in the Dictionary, by the use of such marks as (R.) Reading, (r.) Rare, (X.) Christian, (F.) Formosa. These distinctions are difficult to make; some of the expressions marked "Reading" or "Rare" in the Dictionary seem to me to be in fairly common use. I have had continual difficulty myself in deciding regarding a phrase given to me by a scholar whether it could be fairly regarded as colloquial, or whether it was simply a book phrase spoken in character sounds. A test which suggested itself to me was that a phrase used by people who did not know the characters with which it was written might be regarded as colloquial, as having cut itself loose from the book language. But the application of this test would have involved the expenditure of more time and thought than I was able to give to it. It may be that I have erred in giving too many of such expressions. My idea was that as education spread more and more among the people any such Reading expressions as are really suited to convey a useful idea will come into more general use. In any case their presence is interesting and can do, I hope, no harm.

There are certain expressions used in Formosa derived from the Japanese, and in Singapore from the Malay. These might possibly have been so marked. Yet even many of them have spread to Amoy, partly through Chinese newspapers, whieh depend a good deal upon Japanese translations of new ideas, or through intercourse with visitors from these places, Some of the words given here as derived from the Malay are to be found in a small jest-book printed in Amoy.

For these and other reasons, however, it is well that the student should be careful not to use expressions which he finds in the Supplement until he has satisfied himself, either by experience or by definite enquiry, that they are in use in the district where he lives. I have been often surprised myself how very local certain expressions are. Let me quote here some words of Dr. Douglas:

"The student need not be at all surprised if his Chinese teacher, or even several of them, object to certain phrases or meanings. In such a case let him use these words and phrases about which there is no question; but let him not too hastily conclude that the book is wrong. Many many times I have erased passages which I afterwards found quite correct and restored to their places. For there is no absolute standard of the spoken language; and the usage of various towns, villages, and regions varies so much, that phrases in constant use in one part are unknown in another."

I may quote here a few more words from Dr. Douglas: "Another defect, which I greatly regret, is the very scanty identification of plants, animals, medicines, etc. Want of time is here also the excuse, which I trust my readers will count sufficient. Many such names have been put in with a query." Also it may be noted that among the Chinese themselves there seems to be often some uncertainty as to the exact object meant by the word.

There are a number of expressions in the Supplement that are now practically obsolete, such e.g. as those relating to the late imperial government, the former system of literary examinations, etc. From a strictly practical point of view, these might have been omitted, as the student is very unlikely to meet with them either in reading or conversation. Having them in my notes, however, I thought it well to retain them. They are still a component part of the language, and will serve at any rate as interesting mementoes of a state of things now passing into oblivion.

I have admitted a few phrases which perhaps strictly do not belong to a Chinese-English Dictionary; phrases, that is to say, whose meaning could be fairly easily deduced from a translation of the syllables composing them, but such that the converse process of translation into Chinese is not so easy. I have allowed them to remain as illustrations of Chinese idioms; the student will not, I imagine, object to their presence, though logically they have no place here.

The question naturally rises as to the future of such work as this. Obviously there can be no finality about it; the growth of the language will require a corresponding growth of dictionary, The present Supplement makes no claim to completeness; even had it been complete in the manuscript, it would have been already incomplete by the time of publication. I have myself already begun a list of supplementary words and phrases which came to my knowledge too late for inclusion in the present work. I will feel much obliged to anyone who will send a note of any additions or corrections that may occur to them, either to myself, Tainan, Formosa, or to the Secretary, Eng. Presb. Mission, Amoy.

At the same time we cannot look forward to a mere succession of Supplements. The time will come for the working of all the material into one volume. Let us hope that, when the time does come, there will be found a scholar with leisure and qualifications for the task. The completed work need not be a volume of the size of the Dictionary and Supplements added together. The repetition e.g. of the headings and some phrases which occur in both Dictionary and Supplement occupies a considerable amount of space, which would not be required if the two volumes were combined into one.

I believe, also, that many of the definitions might be considerably compressed without injuring the value of the work. There is reason to believe that in the preparation of the Dictionary Dr. Douglas wrote many of the definitions with more fulness than was absolutely required for the meaning. He knew that ere long it would be necessary to make additions of new words, and the idea was that, by the compression of some of these definitions, space might be found for these additions, without requiring to overrun the limits of the stereotyped page.

I think also that space might be found by omitting some of the expressions. I quite recognize the truth of what is often said, that a large number of illustrations is very helpful to the student of this difficult language. But it seems scarcely necessary, for example, after a phrase has been given in the positive form to repeat it in the negative form simply by the addition of the word "not." Some of the duplicate entries also, such as occur both in the Dictionary and the Supplement, might be unnecessary if some understanding could be come to as to which of its component parts should be looked up in order to find a given phrase.

The question might also be raised whether the proverbs and proverbial expressions might not to a large extent be omitted. They are undoubtedly interesting as illustrating the manner of thought and life of the people, but they are not strictly necessary to the understanding of the language. They might be taken out of this work and, along with numerous others that would immediately suggest themselves, be formed into a "Dictionary of Phrase and Fable." This would both be an interesting book in itself, and would relieve the pressure on the original work.

In any case, I think we should not allow other forty years to elapse before taking steps for carrying on the work. I would suggest that a Committee be appointed, the members of which should pay particular attention to words belonging to their own department, of medicine, theology, science, philosophy or daily life; one of their number to be Chief Reviser. Each of them should have beside him a Chinese scholar, if possible one having some knowledge of the English language. In this way material could be gradually collected, the exact use to be made of it might be settled later on.

In the preparation of the work I have made free use of any dictionaries or other books that I have been able to obtain. I have also received assistance from my Colleagues and other friends, Foreign or Chinese, of which it is not possible to make acknowledgment in detail. One such acknowledgmsnt, however, falls to be made. My Colleague, the Rev. Campbell N. Moody of Shoka, Formosa, during his stay in the Island made a careful study of the original Dictionary, going over it several times with the assistance of Formosan scholars and others. When he heard of my undertaking the work, he copied out the notes that he had made, occupying more than four hundred large pages of manuscript, and forwarded them all to me to be made free use of in my work. For this invaluable help so generously given, I wish to return hearty thanks. But for it the book would be much more imperfect than it is.

I have to return my thanks also to our Foreign Mission Committee and to my Colleagues in Formosa for their kindness in setting me free to a considerable extent from the ordinary work of the mission, so enabling me to give time to this work. I trust that in the use of the Supplement my Colleague missionaries may find some small return for any trouble that my absence has inflicted upon them.

During the printing of the book I have had beside me a young Formosan scholar, Mr. Iû^{n} Sū-íóng, whose knowledge of Chinese, Japanese, and English has been very helpful to me, in the way of making additions and eliminating mistakes.

"With all its imperfections I trust that this book shall prove helpful to those who study the language of Amoy. My chief object has been to assist those who are engaged in the work of Christian missions; but for this purpose I have endeavoured to give a full view of the language so far as I have been able to learn it; and the book is fitted to be equally useful to merchants, travellers, mariners, interpreters, and students." Let it be accepted by the student on account of what it contains, as well as criticised for what it omits.

January, 1923.

Explanation of Abbreviations; etc.

The abbreviations used in the Supplement are the same as those used in the Dictionary itself, although, as explained in the Preface, very much fewer in number.

an asterisk indicates that the word before which it is placed is a new word which is not to be found in the Dictionary. It is placed only before the leading word, though, of course, it applies to all the phrases under that heading, none of which will be found in the Dictionary.

s. see, as in the Dictionary. When followed simply by an English word (s. talent), it means that the same Chinese phrase will be found under the word meaning "talent" in the Dictionary; if followed in addition by a capital letter "S." (s. talent, S.), the phrase will be found in the Supplement.

+ in parenthesis (+) means that the same phrase will be found with different meaning under the same heading in the Dictionary. When followed also by a capital letter "S" (+S.), it means that the phrase will be found with a different meaning under the same heading in the Supplement.

v. see, with the same meaning as in the Dictionary. When followed simply by a Chinese syllable, the reference is to that heading in the Dictionary; when a capital "S" follows, the reference is to the Supplement.

p. 184, col. 2, line 19, for gn-tsóûa read gûn-tsóa.

One or two other misprints I have observed myself, but not having noted them at the time, I cannot locate them now. Through the force of habit, the mark for the nasal sound has been sometimes omitted at the end of words beginning in "m" or "n". Doubtless there are other mistakes that have escaped my notice; I hope none of a serious nature.
